Sign #1:

You're wearing too many hats.

You are the Executive Director, the bookkeeper, the grant writer, the fundraiser, and the administrator - all at once. It's not sustainable, and it's stalling your mission's growth.

Sign #2:

Grant deadlines are slipping through the cracks.

You have a list of potential funders, but you haven't had time to write the proposals, follow up, or report back on past grants. That's missed funding on the table.

Sign #3:

Your bookkeeping isn't "investor ready"

You are using spreadsheets or Quickbooks accounts you haven't logged into in months, and panic sets in at audit or tax time. Funders want clean financials and so should you.

Sign #4:

You're always reacting, never planning.

If your day-to-day is filled with putting out fires instead of building systems and sustainability, it's time to bring in the help.

Sign #5:

You feel burnt out - but can't afford full time staff.

You don't need a full-time hire to get full time value. Strategic virtual support can keep your mission moving forward without breaking your budget.
